'War for the Overworld' is set in a post apocalyptic world dominated by. an aberrant recombination event between a CC9-like and non-CC9-like ancestor (Supplementary Figure S1 and Table S2). We then performed SLV calling using these trees and the whole set of scaffolds (Figure 4{ref-type="fig"}) to try to determine whether some of these recombination events could have been confused as SLVs if SLVs were not called at the phage level. We found some of the recombination events that were detected in the CC9 genome actually happened in the two non-CC9 genomes. For example, the recombination between genome sequences of the two clones CL1 and CL2, which is detected as a recombination event in the CC9 genome, actually happened in the genomes of CL1 and CL2. This finding indicates that recombination events, which can be detected by long-read based assembly, can also be detected by calling at the genome-scale. In order to examine if this can be a source of error in genome-scale calling, we then compared the resulting scaffold sets (Table S2) with the scaffolds of the true CC9 genome (Figure 4{ref-type="fig"}). We found that the latter contains the same number of scaffolds as the former (Table S2), indicating that this is not a major source of error in genome-scale calling. [A representative example of non-CC9-like prophages in the phage sets of two strains. (a) The prophages from strains CL1 and CL2 were detected using *Prophinder* with the *Myoviridae* database. The length of each block (scaffold) is the same in each panel, while the height of each bar is proportional to the number of scaffolds with the same topology. The numbers beside the bars denote the number of scaffolds with that topology in the SLV set (marked with SLV). (b) Visualization of the trees of CL1 and CL2's scaffolds in this example.
