The effect of chlorhexidine diacetate on the long-term colonization of S. aureus in a model of human caries: a pilot study. A previous study had shown that chlorhexidine diacetate (CHX) applied in a mouthrinse formulation protected against a long-term colonization of Staphylococcus aureus for more than 60 days. The present study extends the follow-up and confirms the protective effect of CHX. Twenty volunteers participated in the study. Each had one upper or lower molar with a coronal caries lesion and an asymptomatic contralateral molar. The molars were randomly assigned to one of two treatment groups: a 0.12% CHX or a placebo rinse. At two, four, eight and 12 weeks after treatment, the surface of the four contralateral molars were sampled for S. aureus and evaluated for mutans streptococci. The results show that CHX reduces the growth of S. aureus and the number of mutans streptococci for at least 12 weeks after treatment. CHX has a long-lasting effect on the colonization of S. aureus in a model of human caries. Campus buses line up in front of the Coca-Cola Bottling Company on the
